Here’s a preview of topics featured...

EMPLOYMENT OUTLOOK

One doesn’t have to look far to see that the health care industry is experiencing a shortfall of qualified staff to provide adequate services to the public – a shortfall that appears to be increasing. For you as a professional in the health care industry, this means an increase in the number of jobs coming available.

RESEARCHING COMPANIES

Research a prospective employer before writing a cover letter so you are prepared to customize your resume and letter toward their needs. Researching will help you prepare and show your interest to the employer.

YOUR RESUME

In the job search, your resume is also a summary of who you are, what you have done and what skills you possess – but it is not your life story.

Your resume is your personal marketing brochure to entice an employer to interview you. To increase your odds of getting the interview, use the tips and suggestions in JobMed for creating a more effective and powerful resume.

INTERVIEWING

Everything in your job search leads up to the interview. This is the most crucial step in the process - prepare for it as you would for an exam. Thorough preparation will help you to be comfortable during the interview and demonstrate your interest to the employer.
